

Lighting the Fuse: better engagement in public health through arts and media collaborations

3 April 2017, 9.30am – 1.00pm

Darlington Campus, Teesside University

What is this?

An opportunity to share knowledge, raise questions and generate discussion about the role of arts, media and academic collaborations in engaging diverse audiences in public health research.

Hands on workshop sessions showcasing breadth of public health focused, North East creative collaborations, including use of theatre, mobile apps, comedy, animation & virtual reality, comic books and dance.

Who is it for?

Anyone and everyone who is interested in creatively engaging people in public health research.

What might I gain from this?

People, experiences and know how that together may spark collaborative, arts media and academic networking, funding, research and project ideas across the North East and beyond.

For the programme and online registration, please follow the 'Other events' link (under 'Fuse events') on our home page www.fuse.ac.uk